

COVID-19 in Western Australia

The impact on other communicable diseases

Information on communicable diseases other than COVID-19 collected during January to September 2020 showed:

Influenza

Influenza remained at very low levels since April. The usual increase during winter was not seen in 2020.

Chickenpox decreased during March-April-May, during the most stringent lockdown measures, but has since returned to usual levels.

Salmonella infection stayed at usual levels throughout 2020.

Chlamydia decreased during March-April-May, during the most stringent lockdown measures, but has since returned to usual levels.

Dengue Fever has remained at very low levels since April.

Legionella increased during March-April-May, during the most stringent lockdown measures, but has since returned to usual levels.